Worldwide scam targeting Mandarin-speaking community

Tasmania Police is issuing a new warning about a scam targeting the Mandarin-speaking community.

The scam operates worldwide and could also potentially target members of the Mandarin-speaking community living in Tasmania.

The scam involves:

- pre-recorded messages in Mandarin left via voicemail or on social media networks such as WeChat and WhatsApp.
- a message telling victims they have a parcel on hold for them.
- threats being made to them to transfer large sums of money.
- extortion via fake kidnappings.
- threats of deportation or arrest.

How does it work?

The scams vary but typically include a pre-recorded phone message in Mandarin notifying people there is a parcel on hold for them.

Victims who respond to the call are transferred to people claiming to be from a courier service who tell the victims they have been implicated in a crime and that a parcel with their name on it has been intercepted. This is always a lie.

Victims are then threatened by people claiming to be Chinese authorities such as government officials or police and forced to transfer large sums of money to prevent themselves or any of their family or friends from being deported or charged. This is always a lie.

The scammers then request money is transferred to Bank of China accounts. In most instances these bank accounts are located overseas and are established using false details.

In 2023, police throughout Australia have seen a number of victims staging their own kidnappings on the instructions of the scammers for their use to attempt to extort money from the victim's family members. The victims are tricked into believing that they must comply.

On some occasions the scammers have also demanded that victims:

- film themselves committing sexual acts, and
- obtain loans, use their personal savings, or purchase Crypto currency to transfer money into their overseas bank accounts.

Other red flags include scammers requesting victims activate their video chat function or attend a local police station to appear credible. This request is then met with the scammer creating reasons not to meet.

What to look out for:

- If you receive a random phone call from someone claiming to be a government official of Chinese police telling you that you are suspected of committing a crime, hang up.
- If you have any doubts about someone who says they are from a government department, contact that department directly. Don't use any phone numbers, email addresses or websites provided by the caller. Find the correct number through an independent source or through an online search (official website).
- Do not provide or confirm any personal details to anyone over the phone unless you made the call yourself.
- Never send money via wire transfer or cryptocurrency to anyone who requests it over the phone unless you made the call yourself.
- If you are unsure about any phone calls, emails, or messages, do not comply with any requests – talk it over with someone you trust, or contact Tasmania Police on 131444 or visit police.tas.gov.au.
- Visit the Scamwatch website for more information about current scams in Chinese languages: scamwatch.gov.au.
